

Can you paint kitchen cabinets?

Try a specialist kitchen cabinet paint with the finish you want -- gloss, semi gloss, or satin. These provide a durable and easy to clean surface and will work on all parts of your kitchen cabinets. Don't forget to paint your kickboards too. These take more knocks than the average cupboard door, so you should give these an extra coat of paint.

Can you use water based paint on kitchen cabinets?

Either oil or water-based paints can be used to paint over kitchen cabinets. 'Some argue that oil-based paint can have a smoother finish and durability,' says chartered architectural technologist June Grinstead. Water-based acrylic paint, on the other hand, has no odor so might be preferable to work with. Think paint finish, too.

Should I Paint my Kitchen cabinets with latex or oil based paint?

If you do choose to opt for latex paint, be sure to select a paint with a 100 percent acrylic formulation for greater durability and adhesion. For a more durable option (and one favored by the pros), opt for an oil-based paint. These paints are argued to level out to a smoother finished surface, hiding the imperfections of your cabinets.
